

little fire under the STRENGTH ATHLETE. Maybe Darden's and Hatfield's and Tanny's articles were also printed without permission, and, to think of it, I am wondering how many of my articles might have been published. Wouldn't thou oblige.

I have not seen the edition of PERSONAL INVENTOR. But I can well believe that Arnold Schwarzenegger is wealthy. He isn't dumb, has a degree in business administration and is the only one I know of who made Weider come across. First chance when Joe approached him to come to LA and "work" for him, Arnold demanded and got a weekly salary, a house to live in AND a car. I saw Arnold the other day on a TV talk show. He has lost a great deal of weight and I couldn't help thinking that if he closed one eye and turned sideways you could easily mistake him for a needle. But he was a little too flip in his replies, a bit too wise arsed and his teeth --- he should do something about them since they look like bloody tombstones. But yes, please let me have that page of his.

I have a couple of old girl friends who have made a lot of money in real estate. They both have MSW's --- master of social work --- found nothing could be made with that Trade union ticket and quit to go into real estate. One, a stunning red head and now 42 years of age, dabbled not only in real estate but also in the stock market and is now a millionaire. I keep telling her, when she comes over to "renew old times," that I love her to distraction. She doesn't believe me. I wonder why?

While it is true that you can start with "nothing down" and become a millionaire, the chances of so doing are as likely as Cheery Chinmore to do a double somersault and disappearing up his own arse. And don't think he won't try and claim he did.

I know I may have underestimated the price of discs per pound. But I was trying to make a point. As for how the bar supports all those discs. IT DOESN'T. Just take a look at that shot again --- or better still the drawing in IM. The bar and discs are actually supported by a box like construction of girders. From the girder drops a U shaped bolt that hooks under the bar, thus the girder and bolts support the bar. Now take a gander at the section of the bar held by Cheery Chinmore. You will see 2 U shaped bolts dropping down and hooking under the section of the bar being held. This section of the bar is about two inches above the bottom of the U thus giving the IMPRESSION that the Cheery Chappie has indeed "lifted" the weight. What has happened is merely another and more intricate version of the Indian Rope Trick. In which NOTHING HAPPENS. I also understand that The Cheery Chappie has now "retired" from all lifting --- I always did believe that disfection was the better part of you know what.

Oh what a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive.

I doubt very much that the TMC will ever issue a news letter. I would like this and would certainly welcome it. but I'd want to be paid. I don't get paid now for the work I do, but I certainly would if they did out out a newsletter.

You are a no good swine talking about that Augsburg Dark to me, I sitting here, drinking mugs of decaf or tap water, my mouth drooling at the very thought of that Augsburg Dark, and no way of my getting to it --- Woe Woe.

Scholz's beer garden is still there, has it has been for over 1 HUNDRED YEARS now. I doubt that it will ever go. It is regarded as a State Treasury.
